Competency 1.1, 1.2, & 4: History, Geography, Culture, Government, & Economics During the Colonial Era, 1600-1789

By 1600, the eastern seaboard of North America was populated by Native Americans who had developed a variety of societies. Some were nomadic, while others were sedentary. The English, French, and Dutch settlers who arrived in the early 17th century brought with them a different way of life. They were primarily interested in land and resources for agriculture and trade.

Why? (Purpose of the Settlements)
The primary purpose of the early European settlements in North America was economic. Settlers sought land for agriculture and trade. The Virginia colony, established in 1607, was the first permanent English settlement. It was founded as a place where men could go to make their fortune. The colony's success was based on the cultivation of tobacco, which became a major export.

How? (Methods of Settlement)
The early European settlements in North America were established through a process of exploration and colonization. Explorers like Christopher Columbus and John Cabot discovered the New World, and later, settlers followed them to establish permanent colonies. The colonies were often established as part of a larger imperial project, with the goal of expanding the power and influence of the European nations.
